AIRCRAFT DAMAGE DETAILS

General Description of Damage: The most significant damage is the cabin roll over structure, which was compromised by striking the ground when the airplane flipped over its nose and came to rest upside-down. The damage to the fuselage cabin roll-over structure is considered unrepairable by Cirrus Design Corporation's Engineering Department. The wing, however, has no indications of damage at either the forward or rear spar connection points.

The remaining airframe issues consist of repairable damage to the right-wing tip, rudder, elevators and elevator control linkages, and nose landing gear structure. The engine will require disassembly for sudden-stoppage inspection, and the propeller requires replacement.

The wing offers great potential to be used in the repair of another Cirrus SR22.
